The diagram shows a segment of a DNA double helix. The two strands are represented by two parallel horizontal lines. The top strand has a break in its sugar-phosphate backbone, indicated by a gap in the line. The bottom strand is continuous. The two strands are connected by three vertical lines representing base pairs. The entire segment is enclosed in a rectangular box.

A diagram of a double-stranded DNA molecule. It consists of two horizontal lines representing the sugar-phosphate backbones, one above and one below. The central portion of these lines is connected by a red double-strand, indicating a specific region of interest or a mutation. The ends of the DNA molecule are shown as grey blocks.

A schematic diagram of a protein structure. It consists of a long horizontal bar. The left end is a grey rectangle. The right end is a black rectangle. In the center of the bar, there is a red double-stranded structure, resembling a DNA or RNA duplex, with two parallel red lines connected by horizontal rungs.
